7. Lessons learnt from PNPCA PC Process

- Misperception on PC process by external stakeholders expected a “yes” or “no” answer (especially for Xayaburi and Don Sahong).

- At first, stakeholder involvement was seen insufficient as they were only given the outcomes, rather than opportunity to engage (but improved with Pak Beng and Pak Lay).

- Notification at a “feasibility stage” ➔ insufficient information on final potential impacts, and updated information provided from time to time ➔ catching a moving train

- Greater focus on avoid, minimise and mitigate leading to development of a set of measures

- Post- PC process is critical to refining and firming up recommendations into “Statement” and “Joint Action Plan”
• Increased relevance of conjunctive management of the cascade: the need to align with the design parameters of other HPPs, and importance of multiplicative effects is becoming more relevant with each HPP on the mainstream.

• Increasing cumulative impacts: the risks associated with the cumulative impacts of dams on both the mainstream and tributaries is growing with each successive Prior Consultation process.

• Roles of PDG2009 and revised PDG2019: an expectation that the review would be evaluated against the draft PDG2019

• More interaction between MRCS and developer should be promoted to gain better understanding of the project and of MRC recommendations.
The Joint Action Plan:

- Gives confidence to all MCs that their concerns are being addressed in the ongoing design, construction and future operations of the projects;
- Keeps the MRC engaged in the ongoing process of identifying measures to avoid, minimise and mitigate potential transboundary impacts; and
- Provides access to a wider pool of expertise, if required.

The JAP Tracking Matrix:

- Provides a mechanism to track progress of JAP implementation, and
- Provides a mechanism for the MRCS to report to the Joint Committee.
8. Implementation of the JAP of Pak Beng and Pak Lay (Cont.)
